PREFACE

With this first volume of a three-volume catalogue of the Alcobaça manuscripts from the Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon, I take pleasure in announcing a new sub-series, Portuguese Libraries, of the continuing series of Descriptive Inventories published by the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library. In 1981 the first volume of the series Descriptive Inventories of Manuscripts Microfilmed for the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library, Austrian Libraries appeared. Prepared by Donald Yates, it described the works contained in nine small Austrian collections.¹ The purpose of that volume was to support the Hill Library's stated mission of preserving on microfilm and making available to scholars the contents of collections of medieval manuscript books.

The years since that volume's publication have seen the production of two other volumes in the Austrian Libraries series for the collections of St. Georgenberg/Fiecht and Herzogenburg.² With the appearance of an excellent series of manuscript catalogues from the team of scholars participating in the project Handschriftenbeschreibung in Österreich, directed by Otto Mazal, we have decided to postpone production of future volumes of our own Austrian series. The initial purpose of all these volumes is to secure access to manuscripts for the world of scholarship. This purpose can best be accomplished through cooperation rather than competition. Therefore, we are turning our attention to the Hill Library's holdings from Portuguese libraries.

The current volume, by Thomas Amos, describes the first 150 manuscripts of the Fundo Alcobaça of the Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon. The second volume will describe manuscripts 151-302 (by Thomas Amos), and the third will describe manuscripts 303-456 (by Thomas Amos and Jonathan Black). All three volumes will further the Hill Library's goal of providing access to important primary sources.

These volumes also mark the beginning of a new aspect of the Library's work. Thanks to the generosity and personal involvement of Hill Library Board of Overseer's member, Mr. Louis F. Hill, the Library has entered the computer age. Mr. Hill's gift not only helps in the production of the printed volume before you, but it also makes possible the creation over time of a computerized set of inventory lists and a data base of manuscript information. Although these are long term projects, they employ the technology of the present to provide an even greater measure of access to the treasures of the past.

The microfilmed manuscript books described in these volumes are available at the Hill Library only through the cooperation and diligent work of a large number of people. Among the many figures in Portugal who supported our project, I should especially like to thank Dr^a. Isabel Vilares Cepeda, Director of the Secção dos Manuscritos of the Biblioteca Nacional. She has been untiring in helping us from the beginning and has provided strong support for all aspects of our Portuguese Project. Her recently announced retirement will be a major loss to us all. From its beginnings, our work in Portugal was directly supervised by a series of able Field Directors. The Portugal project's first director was Dr. William F. Lanahan, and he was followed by Fr. Jonathan Fischer, O.S.B., a monk of Saint John's Abbey. At present our work now beginning at the Biblioteca da Ajuda is supervised by Br. Richard Oliver, O.S.B., also of Saint John's Abbey. Special thanks go to them, to the Directors of the libraries who have participated in this enterprise and to the Ministry of Culture of Portugal for making the microfilming possible.

Anyone who has worked with a microfilmed manuscript knows that its primary use is for the texts it contains. It is just not possible to reconstruct the original codex entirely from film, no matter how good the copy. The individual's view of the codex is sometimes defined by the photographer's focal field. These volumes may, perhaps, seem to have given more attention to codicological matters than the nature of the medium on which they are based justifies. Yet they fully accomplish their main purpose, which is to inventory the texts contained in the microfilmed manuscripts and to make fully known the many resources available for study at the Hill Library.³

In closing, I would once again like to thank the Abbot and chapter of Saint John's Abbey and the President of Saint John's University for their support and sponsorship through the years. I should also like to thank the National Endowment for the Humanities for the program grant under which the Portuguese microfilming and part of the cataloguing were done, and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation for grants which have allowed us to have a cataloguing staff over the years. To these principal donors and to the people who have helped make matching grants under these programs goes our sincere gratitude.

INTRODUCTION

In 1980 the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library began the first phase of its Portugal Filming Project at the Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon.¹ Among the first manuscripts to be microfilmed, as Portugal Project numbers 1-456, were the manuscripts of the Fundo Alcobaça which once belonged to the former Royal Cistercian monastery of Santa Maria a Velha or Alcobaça. The current volume is the first of a three-volume analytical catalogue of the Alcobaça manuscripts.

From its founding in 1153 until it was sacked in 1833 and suppressed in 1834, Alcobaça played a significant role in the history of Portugal and the Cistercian Order. Its surviving manuscripts form an important body of sources for many fields of study. The decision to provide a catalogue of these manuscripts from the Hill Library microfilms became an easy one to make. The decision became even easier to justify when it became apparent that neither of the two existing catalogues provides a reasonable measure of reliable access to the individual works within the manuscripts.²

Alcobaça manuscripts are identified by a double shelfmark system, e.g., Codex Alcobacensis XCIII/2. The first element, the Roman numeral, refers to an Alcobaça shelfmark series that seems to date from the late seventeenth or early eighteenth century. The Arabic numeral element provides the Biblioteca Nacional shelfmark. Retention of the Roman numerals comes from the fact that from 1775 until 1930-32 the only existing catalogue for the manuscripts was the anonymous Index Codicum which converted existing Alcobaça shelfmarks into Roman numeral listings. The Hill Library Portugal Project microfilm numbers follow exactly the Arabic numeral element of the shelfmarks.

The current Alcobaça collection, as it exists on Hill Library microfilms, consists of 453 manuscripts. In 1775, Alcobaça possessed 476 codices manuscripti (numbers I-CDLXXVI of the Index). To this number were added seven additional manuscripts after 1775, bringing the total to 483. By the time the collection arrived at the Biblioteca Nacional, after the French occupation of 1810 and the sack in 1833, twenty-one manuscripts had vanished and a further eight were placed in the Arquivo Nacional da Torre do Tombo -- tables describing these manuscripts can be found at the back of this Introduction. Between 1834 and 1930-32, two manuscripts from the Fundo Illuminados were added to the Fundo Alcobaça, bringing the total of manuscripts to 456.

History of Alcobaça

Since the publication of the Inventário dos Códices Alcobacenses in 1930-32, three manuscripts, Cod. Alc. CLI/64, CCCLXX/132 and CDXLIV/308, have disappeared from the Biblioteca Nacional. Project numbers have been assigned to these manuscripts, but, failing their reappearance, descriptions of them are based on the Inventário. The current volume provides descriptions of Portugal Project numbers 1-150. Volume II of this series will describe Project numbers 151-302 and volume III will describe Project numbers 303-456.

The three volumes of this catalogue will offer the reader a full account of the materials to be found in the Alcobaça manuscripts. Codicological paragraphs in the descriptions will provide as full an accounting of the particulars and condition of the manuscript books as it is possible to make reliably from microfilms. Content entries will identify individual works and provide a scholarly apparatus for them. It is our hope in making this catalogue to furnish a guide to the Alcobaça manuscripts that will make them fully accessible to the world of scholarship, whether in their original form in the Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon or on microfilms held at the Hill Library.

The remainder of this Introduction will provide a short history of Alcobaça to illustrate its general lines of development. A history of the library and scriptorium, as far as these can be reconstructed, will follow. These two parts of the Introduction will also provide an overview of the manuscripts to be described in this volume. The Introduction will conclude with an explanation of the format and elements of the manuscript descriptions. Introductions to volumes II and III of this series will contain only an overview of manuscripts and the explanation of the descriptions.

History of Alcobaça

In 1781, Abbot José Lourenço do Vale of Alcobaça wrote to Clairvaux to obtain copies of records containing references to the history of Alcobaça. The abbot of Clairvaux wrote back to report that no trace of any such reference could be found.³ This exchange was unfortunate for the abbot, and even more unfortunate for posterity. The lack of early outside documents and the failure to examine existing Alcobaça documents critically would lead to a large number of inventions which continue to cloud the abbey's history.

The Cistercian monastery of Santa Maria a Velha took its common name from its site.⁴ Located at the confluence of the rivers Alcoa and Baça, the name Alcobaça became attached to the abbey from the first and it remains the name of the town which grew around the Cistercian community. These are, unfortunately, about the only facts concerning Alcobaça's early history which rest on certain foundations.

Much of Alcobaça's real history lies hidden behind a web of mythology concerning its origins. In addition to the conscious or semi-conscious falsifying of the abbey's history, there has been almost no modern critical work done on the documents. No single list of abbots, for example, agrees with any other list.⁵ There is also widespread disagreement about many other aspects of Alcobaça's past.

The web of Alcobaça mythology, spun throughout the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, came mainly from the pens of two Alcobaça monks. Bernardo de Brito OCist (1569-1617) established the myth in his Crónica de Cister (Lisbon, 1602) and the first two parts of the Monarchia Lusitana (Alcobaça and Lisbon, 1597 and 1607). His work was corrected in some respects and added to in others by António Brandão OCist (1581-1637) author of parts three and four of the Monarchia Lusitana.⁶ Each man was in turn Crónista-Mor or Chief Historiographer of the Congregation of St. Bernard, a Cistercian congregation founded by Alcobaça, and of the Kingdom of Portugal. It would be correct, if somewhat uncharitable, to state that both authors based their works on forged documents, false traditions and a fair amount of wishful thinking.

Alcobaça's foundation myth can be summarized as follows. In 1147 the army of King Afonso Henriques (1140-1185) lay poised before Santarem. On the evening before what proved to be the final battle of this campaign, the king had a dream in which Bernard of Clairvaux appeared before him to promise the king victory. Upon awakening, Afonso vowed to build a monastery for the Cistercians if victorious. After the victory, Afonso Henriques' "brother," Pedro Alfonso, whose patronymic should have been the first sign that something was not right, travelled to Clairvaux and met with Bernard. After an exchange of correspondence with Afonso Henriques, Bernard sent a colonizing party to Portugal.⁷ The Cistercians built the "first" monastery of Alcobaça by 1152 and, in the next year, Afonso Henriques issued the foundation charter. The post facto issuance of the charter should have been recognized as another questionable feature of this tale.

This lovely and often recounted story is almost entirely a sixteenth-century invention. Motivation for its creation came from the effort to found a Portuguese Cistercian congregation dedicated to Bernard and independent of Cîteaux and the Chapters General. The Congregation of St. Bernard came into being in 1587.⁸ This date, in turn, helps explain why datable elements of the Alcobaça myth can be found on either side of 1587.

To be fair to de Brito, much of the myth took shape before he began to write. It can be found in a simple form in the Memoriás, dated 1575, of the Alcobaça monk Hilário das Chagas -- Cod. Alc. CCCLXXIII/92 described below. De Brito, however, added to the myth the forged letters of Bernard made by Gaspar Alves de Lousada Machado of Braga -- although de Brito did believe them genuine.⁹ He also created the legend of Pedro Alfonsi, in fact a natural son of Afonso Henriques who later became a monk of Alcobaça and was buried there in the 1220s.¹⁰ From de Brito's works, this myth, and others that he helped to create, had a wide circulation and eventually became repeated uncritically from the days of Angel Manrique down to our own.

Not all Alcobaça documents have been contaminated by the desire to place the abbey's origins closer to Bernard and Clairvaux than they actually were. A local memorial on the foundation written in the fourteenth century recounts what looks to be a reliable version of the founding.¹¹ This document, the Alcobaça foundation charter, a listing of the abbots in the margins of the Alcobaça Martyrology, Cod. Alc. CCC/231, and the critical work of Dom Maur Cocheril form the basis for an account of the founding and early history of Alcobaça.

The taking of Santarem in 1147, and the capture of Lisbon in the following year with the help of English Crusaders, opened for settlement the southern parts of Estremadura to the fledgling Kingdom of Portugal. To encourage new settlement, and to expand the southward movement of his own part of Christendom, Afonso Henriques provided lands in the new territories for monastic foundations. An earlier phase of the Portuguese Reconquista had resulted in the first Cistercian houses in Portugal at Tarouca and Sever after 1140.¹² On one occasion in the pattern of new foundations, however, the Cistercians settled at Mazoura in 1152 abandoned the site in the same year and returned northward.¹³ This event would leave an interesting echo in the Alcobaça foundation charter.

Sometime after 1148, Afonso Henriques sought a colonizing party from Clairvaux for a new monastery to be built at Alcobaça. There was nothing particularly surprising or significant in the choice of Clairvaux as the source for colonists. Afonso Henriques was the son of Count Henry of Burgundy, and the king retained ties with that area. By 1148, Bernard and Clairvaux had already acquired an international reputation. The "legend" does nothing to alter the basic facts behind Alcobaça's founding.

Bernard sent to Portugal a colonizing party consisting of the first abbot, Ranulphus, and at least twelve monks sometime in 1152 or early 1153.¹⁴ While this party may have been on the site as early as 1152, the foundation charter was issued on April 8, 1153.¹⁵ The charter endowed the abbey with an extensive amount of land, later known as the "Coutos" of Alcobaça, and it does confirm the fact that Alcobaça was a daughter house of Clairvaux founded by Bernard.¹⁶ A close reading, however, proves the charter to have been the work of a careful and cautious administrator rather than a man in the blaze of religious fervor. Afonso Henriques stated as a condition of the grant that, if the monks ever abandoned the site, the land and all rights to it would revert to the crown.¹⁷ There would be no repetition of the Mouraza fiasco. This document must have provided cold comfort for the makers of the Alcobaça myth.

Two versions exist as well for the early years of the abbey. According to the oldest tradition, Ranulphus and his monks began their new monastic life on the site at Alcobaça. The early buildings began to give way in 1178 to the foundations of a new monastic complex and the famous abbey church begun by Martinho I, the third abbot, who also established the monastic cemetery.¹⁸ Certainly Alcobaça had already begun to flourish by the 1170s, establishing its first daughter-house at Bouro in 1174.¹⁹ Cocheril, however, placed the first community at Criqueda, to the north of the Alcobaça site, from where the monks supervised the building of what would eventually become their home. In his version of the early years, building on the site did not begin until the 1170s or 1180s, and the monks did not occupy Alcobaça until 1223.²⁰ Cocheril based his argument on placename evidence, a Criqueda church bore the vocable Santa Maria a Velha, and there is no solid documentary support for either version. Given the conditional clause of the foundation charter, however, it is tempting to place the monks on the site itself close to 1153.

The abbey's growth in the twelfth century was slow but steady. Surviving documents suggest no or few royal or noble donations until the 1210s.²¹ Although Alcobaça had received an extensive grant of lands, actual settlement of them developed slowly through the remainder of the century. In addition, the abbey was located very close to the river Tagus frontier which separated Portugal from the western sections of al-Andalus. After the decisive defeat of a Castilian army at the battle of Alarcos in 1195, the Muslims attempted a general push forward all along their frontier. During this year, Alcobaça was temporarily overrun by a Muslim army or Muslim raiders.²² With this event, we are once more in the realm of mythology.

The events of 1195 have been recounted in three versions, none of them particularly credible. One account has a general massacre of Abbot Mendus and all of his monks, who were killed while chanting Psalms in choir. A second story has Abbot Mendus killed while leading or inspiring a band of

Alcobaça feudatories to halt the invading Muslims until the royal army could meet them. Yet a third version has an unnamed abbot in Lisbon on business while his monks, to the number of 1,000(!), were massacred.²³ In attempting to make sense of these accounts, Cocheril has added a fourth version which sees a massacre of Abbot Fernando and his entire community.²⁴

The basic problem with all versions of the Alcobaça massacre is that however the story is recounted, it left absolutely no trace in contemporary documents. Statutes of the Cistercian Chapter General for 1195 ask for prayers on account of the incursion of "Sarracens," but statutes for that year or for the years 1196-1200 make no mention of difficulties at Alcobaça.²⁵ The deaths of the military knights in their Spanish priory of Calatrava are commemorated in the Cistercian Menology.²⁶ There is no such commemoration for Alcobaça. The massacre is not commemorated in the calendars of the abbey's surviving liturgical books or in the Alcobaça Martyrology copied around 1240. In the Martyrology, Mendus and Fernando are simply listed among the deceased abbots.²⁷ Necrologies of other Portuguese monasteries do not commemorate Mendus or Fernando as martyrs, nor do they mention the massacre of the community.²⁸ More to the point of this Introduction, there is no obvious break in continuity in script styles between manuscripts which can be assigned to the last decades of the twelfth century and those which belong to the early years of the thirteenth. The absence of such a major event from these records does not inspire confidence in its existence.

Physical problems also exist for the massacre myth. In 1195, Alcobaça sent the necessary abbot and twelve monks to found a second daughter-house at Seiça.²⁹ If the massacre took place in this same year, then where did the new Alcobaça monks come from? The Seiça colonists did not return, and no trace exists of a new group of monks being sent from other Portuguese houses or from Clairvaux.³⁰ Belief in the massacre story, in any version, requires belief in the existence of a new group of monks who do not identify themselves as such in any way, were large enough in number to establish Alcobaça's third daughter-house at Maceira Dão around 1200, were able to copy manuscripts in the exact style of their predecessors, but who did not at all commemorate the deaths of these predecessors at the hands of the "infidel."³¹ Whatever disruption of community life did take place in 1195, it does not seem to have been major, nor did it produce any long-lasting effects.

The thirteenth century saw a great deal of growth and development both within the Alcobaça community and in terms of the abbey's importance in Portugal. The monastic complex, for which building commenced in 1178, was completed in 1223. Abbot Pedro Egeas, in whose abbatiate the complex was finished, introduced the laus perennis to Alcobaça at this time.³² On November 20, 1252, the magnificent abbey church, modeled in its first phase after Clairvaux II then Clairvaux III, was dedicated by Bishops Alvaro of Lisbon and Egeas of Coimbra. The church remains one of the most important surviving monuments of Romanesque architecture in Europe, although its facade was remodeled in the flamboyant Gothic style under King Manoel I (1495-1521).³³ The date of the consecration, November 20, can be found in the calendars of many of the surviving liturgical books to mark the anniversary of the dedication of the church.

The abbey increased both its influence and its wealth during this century. Abbots of Alcobaça served as members of the royal council and, later, the Cortés, having precedence after the bishops.³⁴ They held the position of Grand Almoner to the Kings of Portugal from sometime in the thirteenth century until the suppression of the abbey.³⁵ Royal patronage, after the death of Sancho I, led to increased grants, donations and privileges. To attract settlers to its extensive holdings, successive abbots granted charters, forals -- the Spanish fueros, for towns beginning with Aljubarotta in 1230 and including such towns as Cos and Evora.³⁶ By the end of the Middle Ages, Alcobaça controlled eleven towns and two seaports. It had contributed greatly to the development of Portuguese agriculture and had introduced foreign craftsmen to instruct its dependents in a variety of industrial and mining techniques.³⁷

It is difficult to get a sense of what this period of growth meant in terms of the numbers of monks in the community at any given time. The original community had to number at least thirteen according to Cistercian legislation. The estimate given above in the massacre narrative of 1,000 monks in 1195 has no relation to reality. A second account has 150 monks dying in two months of the plague in 1348. Practically the only solid number for the Alcobaça community comes from 1762, when 139 monks are listed.³⁸ Given the size of the monastic complex and church, the community would have been large by medieval standards, but there is no objective way of turning the word "large" into any sort of numerical figure.

Abbots of Alcobaça also made significant contributions to the intellectual life of Portugal during this century. In 1269, Abbot Estevam Martins created the first school open to the laity in Portugal. Modeled after the episcopal schools, it taught grammar, logic and theology.³⁹ To its presence at Alcobaça may be attributed the three copies of Evrard of Béthune's Graecismus and other grammatical works among the manuscripts described in this volume. Abbot Martinho II took a leading part in the foundation of the University of Lisbon -- later transferred to Coimbra -- between 1288 and 1290.⁴⁰ The monks of Alcobaça retained close ties with the university down to the suppression of the abbey in 1834. These ties are illustrated in part by the sixteenth- and seventeenth-century philosophical and theological treatises among the manuscripts described below.

History of Alcobaça

In addition to intellectual contributions and the pastoral care it oversaw through the network of parishes it controlled, Alcobaça also contributed to the physical well-being of its dependents. A hospital in addition to the regular monastic infirmary was established in 1200.⁴¹ Much later, between 1429 and 1481, the abbey created Portugal's first pharmacy under the direction of a French monk, Johannes, around whom developed a local cultus.⁴² These institutions may well have functioned outside the normal patterns of Alcobaça's life. No medical manuscripts or herbaria can be found among the surviving manuscripts.

One of the more fundamental and long-lasting of the many contributions Alcobaça made to Portuguese culture was the role it played in helping to shape and, perhaps, create literary Portuguese prose. Traditionally, credit for the establishment of formal Portuguese prose has been given to a series of fifteenth-century royal historiographers, such as Fernão Lopes and Rui de Pina.⁴³ Their work, however, may well have been based in terms of prose style and vocabulary on a series of prose translations from Latin, Italian, and French into Portuguese made at Alcobaça between 1350 and 1490. These translations continued into the seventeenth century and also led to original prose works by Alcobaça authors.

The series of translations began with works on spiritual formation such as John Cassian's Collationes (in manuscripts to be described in Volume II), and a translation of the Dominican Dominicus de Calvaca's Speculum Crucis by the Alcobaça monk Melchior dos Reis before 1400.⁴⁴ It included other monastic works such as Hugh of Saint Victor's Expositio in Regula Sancti Augustini, and the Customary, Ordinarium and Liber Usuum of the Cistercian Order.⁴⁵ Some of these translations date from the middle and end of the fifteenth century, as is the case for most of the translations described in this volume. Others come from the period between 1350 and 1420, in other words, before the works of the secular historiographers.⁴⁶ One link between the Alcobaça works and the court historians would have been the involvements of the abbots of Alcobaça at the court. This link can be established for the interest at Alcobaça in translating Ludolf of Saxony's Vita Christi and the appearance of translated passages of that work in the Leal Conselheiro.⁴⁷ At the very least, it should be said that Portuguese prose had two bases of origin, one of which seems to have stemmed from Alcobaça.

During the first three centuries of Alcobaça's existence, the abbey played a reasonably prominent part in the affairs of the Cistercian Order in Portugal and on a wider scale. Its abbots and affairs figure at regular intervals in the statutes of the Chapters General throughout the thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries.⁴⁸ The surviving manuscript books include a number of collections of Cistercian legislation, customaries in Latin and Portuguese and copies of the Liber Usuum in both languages that have been largely ignored by students of the Order's history. Abbots of Alcobaça became visitators and held a paternal jurisdiction over the Portuguese military orders of Christ and Calatrava, as the customaries among the manuscripts also illustrate. After 1350, however, the course of Alcobaça's history began to pull it away from Cîteaux and the regular structures of Cistercian governance.

This process of separation resulted, at first, from the support of Cîteaux and Clairvaux for Avignon and Portuguese support of Rome during the Great Schism. The Schism tended to paralyze normal governance of the Order. In 1381, Pope Urban VI reserved to the papacy the right to confirm Alcobaça's abbatial elections which had previously been held by Clairvaux.⁴⁹ Pope Nicholas V in 1452 made Alcobaça's abbots visitators for all Portuguese Cistercian and Benedictine houses.⁵⁰ In effect, the abbey was now free from supervision by the Chapters General and Clairvaux. The separation became complete in 1567 when Cardinal-Prince Henrique, commendatory abbot of Alcobaça, established the independent Congregation of Saint-Bernard under the leadership of triennial abbots-general of Alcobaça.⁵¹ This Congregation meant a formal rejection of Cistercian government as opposed to an already existing de facto rejection by non-attendance at the Chapters General. The triennial abbots-general violated the oldest principles of Cistercian community life. It was this particular phase of Alcobaça's history that led to the formation of the foundation myth, in order to justify the separation.

While a number of manuscripts come from the post-1500 period, few useful sources for the abbey's history can be found among them. Alcobaça retained its ties to the crown under the houses of Aviz (1385-1580) and Bragança (1640-1910). The royal princes Afonso OCist, Cardinal-Bishop of Lisbon, and Henrique OCist, Cardinal and King of Portugal, served as commendatory abbots from 1523-1540 and 1540-1567 respectively. One of the last Alcobaça manuscripts contains texts of a Latin orations made on the occasion of King Pedro III's visit to the abbey in 1775.⁵² Few outside sources describe Alcobaça in this period. One exception would be William Beckwith's account of a visit to the abbey in 1795.⁵³ Beckwith's predilection for the "Gothick," as in his imagined secret passage between the abbey and a neighboring convent, makes his narrative almost valueless.

In 1810, Alcobaça became a divisional headquarters for Massena's French army which faced Wellington's Portuguese and British troops who held the lines of Torres Vedras. French troops removed anything of value that had not been hidden. Among the manuscripts that disappeared about this time were three codices containing the works of Flavius Josephus (see Table Two below). The overall effect of the French on the Library, however, was minimal.

History of Library and Scriptorium

The monks who reoccupied the abbey after the French retreated had worse to face in the political difficulties that wracked Portugal in the 1820s and 1830s.⁵⁴ In 1826 King Pedro IV (Pedro I of Brazil) abdicated the Portuguese throne in favor of his daughter Maria II (1826-1828; 1834-1853). Pedro's brother Miguel took the throne by force in 1828. The ensuing civil conflict saw the post-Napoleonic Iberian struggle between Liberals (party of Maria) and Traditionalists (party of Miguel) in full force. The church backed Miguel, which made the great abbeys focal points for popular discontent.

For Alcobaça, the end of this particular struggle came in 1833. Between July and October the monks abandoned the abbey and returned to it on several occasions as the forces for popular uprising waxed and waned about them. On October 16 the abbey was sacked by the townspeople, who had forced the monks to leave three days earlier. The government stepped in to save most of the manuscripts and some printed books, but the abbey remained abandoned.⁵⁵ Miguel abdicated the throne early in 1834, and on May 28 of that year the Cortès passed a decree suppressing the religious orders. The many contributions of Alcobaça to Portugal over almost eight centuries live on today only in the surviving monastic buildings and in the manuscripts of the Fundo Alcobaça of the Biblioteca Nacional.

History of the Library and Scriptorium

A significant part of the surviving Alcobaça manuscripts came from its own scriptorium. They were copied or written within a framework of legislation governing the activities of libraries and scriptoria in the houses of the Cistercian Order. The Cistercians followed in most respects the provisions for lectio divina in Benedict's Rule.⁵⁶ As had been the case with Benedictine houses earlier, the need for books for lectio meant that all Cistercian monasteries would have some sort of library and, in most cases, a scriptorium. Regulations guiding the work done in the scriptorium and the role of the library came from the Usus and the Consuetudines, as modified by the statutes of the Chapters General.⁵⁷ The regulations formed the general context within which Alcobaça's library developed.

The library was called armarium in the legislation. An abbot could appoint a librarian or assign charge of the library and scriptorium to the chant master.⁵⁸ In most Cistercian houses the library was located adjacent to the cloister. Such was the case at Clairvaux, and the same may have been true for Alcobaça.⁵⁹ The bibliothecarius distributed books on the first Sunday of Lent for lectio and otherwise administered the library and scriptorium.⁶⁰ As legislation makes clear, the entire community had access to the library. The Chapter General of 1185 ordered that copies of Gratian's Decretum not be kept in the library because some could find error in it.⁶¹ In 1217, the Chapter General decreed that statutes of the Chapters General be displayed on a tabula in the library so that they could be read and obeyed by all.⁶²

Scriptoria in Cistercian houses could be found adjacent to but separated from the library. At Clairvaux the scriptoria consisted of twelve or fifteen small cells in the Cloître du colloque.⁶³ The separation came from the fact that scribes, under the direction of the librarian, could break claustral silence for the purpose of copying.⁶⁴ Other rules bound their activities closely. Scribes could not make elaborately decorated initials or miniatures -- a regulation more than occasionally ignored -- and could not bind books with gold or silver ornaments.⁶⁵ They could not copy books outside of the monastery, and no Cistercian could compose an original work without the specific permission of the Chapter General.⁶⁶ The "proof-tale" for the latter regulation is the example of Guerricus of Igny who, on his deathbed, ordered the burning of a sermonary which he recalled had been written without the necessary permission.⁶⁷ How long this statute continued to be enforced or observed is not clear. There was never a medieval equivalent of the Imprimatur in the Cistercian manuscripts.

On occasion, however, the Chapters General discovered that the world of books could acquire an independent momentum. In 1278 the Chapter General decreed that monks could not spend claustral hours or miss office to work in the scriptorium. The following year saw the revocation of that statute.⁶⁸ No reason was provided for this change of mind. Most probably the Cistercians, like other religious orders, felt the pressures of the increased pace of intellectual activity and the concomitant demand for books during this century. Certainly the growth of the Alcobaça collection during the thirteenth century, as noted in Table One below, provides some measure of this demand.

If the history of Alcobaça's library developed within this legislative framework, other Cistercian legislation helped to shape its origins and a crucial element of its early development. The Cistercian Chapter General of 1133 laid down strict regulations for the founding of new monasteries which were set out in the statutes for 1134.⁶⁹ According to this legislation, Abbot Ranulphus and his party brought with them from Clairvaux at the very least a missal, customary, Liber Usuum, psalter, hymnal, collectaneum, lectionary, antiphonal and gradual.⁷⁰ Texts of these particular books were standardized throughout the Cistercian order.⁷¹

History of Library and Scriptorium

The responsibility of a founding monastery to provide books for its daughter houses was strictly enforced. In 1212, for example, the Chapter General forced an abbot of Cadouin to do penance for failing to provide two daughter houses with the necessary ecclesiastical books and to make good on what he owed them.⁷² From other evidence it is clear that Clairvaux was quite generous to its daughter houses. This generosity, in the form of a liberal initial gift of books and the lending of other books to be copied, has been well documented for the monastery of Dunes.⁷³ It can also be seen as the origin of many of the books in the Alcobaça library.

Are any of the surviving Alcobaça manuscripts directly from Clairvaux? This does not seem likely. Many of the "first-generation" service books and other Clairvaux "gifts," however, do survive in the form of "second-generation" copies. A direct relationship between Alcobaça and Clairvaux continued into the 1200s, and the filial relationship in matters of governance remained intact until 1452.⁷⁴ Alcobaça's earliest surviving liturgical books and its copies of the works of Bernard, Hugh of Saint Victor and other Cistercian "standards" are based on Clairvaux traditions of these texts. This connection has been established for Alcobaça copies of the works of Bernard and the five-volume Alcobaça Legendary.⁷⁵ Ties between the two houses as they appear in other manuscripts will be noted in the individual manuscript descriptions.

Alcobaça's library, then, existed from the beginning of the monastery's history. Its scriptorium came into being not long after. The earliest datable manuscript from the scriptorium is Cod. Alc. CCCIII/365, a copy of Burchard of Worms' Decretum, written in the abbacy of Martinho I (1175-1191). It contains the following ex libris, "Iste liber est sancte marie de alcobacia," found in only a few of the manuscripts. It also contains the following anathema:

Et ego martinus eiusdem loci abbas dico et confirmo ut quicumque eum auferre aut extra domum istam dare presumpserit auctoritate dei omnipotentis et eius genetricis et beati benedicti et beati bernardi et omnium sanctorum anathema sit et indignatione domini nostri ihesu christi et beate marie se incurre non dubitet.⁷⁶

Another Alcobaça scriptorium formula of the thirteenth century, and later, comes as a colophon to many of the manuscripts: "Qui scripsit scribat, semper cum domino vivat (or benedicat)." This formula will occasionally also contain the name of the scribe.

François Dolbeau's dating of the manuscripts which make up the Alcobaça Legendary helps confirm the dating of the origins of the scriptorium

History of Library and Scriptorium

to sometime between 1170 and 1190.⁷⁷ Other researchers have noted the presence of twelfth-century manuscripts in the Fundo Alcobaça. The tendency, however, has been to assume a French origin for them, as was done by Rudolph Goy in his study of the manuscript tradition of the works of Hugh of Saint Victor.⁷⁸ In fact, the majority of the surviving manuscripts were copied at Alcobaça.

The origin of the scriptorium in the 1170s or 1180s and the Clairvaux origin of a number of the manuscripts produced a paleographical curiosity throughout the collection. Early Alcobaça manuscripts were written in a version of the twelfth-century French bookhand that represents a transitional form of script between Carolingian Minuscule and a not yet fully articulated Gothic script. This form of script is called Protogothica in these volumes. Protogothica persisted in the Alcobaça manuscripts into the fourteenth century and, despite its gradual replacement by more purely Gothic scripts, can be found in some fifteenth-century manuscripts as well. The connection between Clairvaux and Alcobaça was not only significant in terms of textual traditions, it also left an enduring legacy in the scriptorium.

Although we have the names of some sixty-five Alcobaça monks who copied manuscripts, we know very little about the actual working of the scriptorium. The manuscripts provide only individual facts without supplying the basis for a broader context. Most of them came from the work of a single scribe. Where more than one scribe was involved, the resulting codex was as likely to be a collection of disparate pieces as an assignment spread across the scriptorium. That Alcobaça's scribes received traditional training in a variety of ancient and current scripts can be inferred from a curious Runic colophon in Cod. Alc. LXXV/153.⁷⁹ We do not know the names of any of the librarians and masters of the scriptorium until Bento or Benedicto de São Bernardo in the late seventeenth century. Abbots of Alcobaça ordered the copying of certain manuscripts: Abbot Pedro ordered Cod. Alc. CXXX/5 in 1250; Nicholao Vieira ordered Cod. Alc. CCCXXVI/73; and so on. Cod. Alc. CCCXVI/276, a copy of Martinus Polonus' Margaritae, was sent by Abbot Vincente Geraldes (1349-1368) to Alcobaça's College of Santa Maria at the University of Lisbon, but was back at the abbey by 1469 for use by the novices. Many of these facts apply more to the individual manuscripts than to the scriptorium as a whole.

Although growth of the abbey's library depended to a large extent on the work of its copyists, the library also benefited from outside acquisitions. Two of the oldest manuscripts in the collection came from outside and are described in this volume. One of them, Cod. Alc. XXXVIII/136, contains Isidore of Seville's Quaestiones and three sermons and was written in a Visigothic script between 1150 and 1175 most probably in Spain. The second oldest datable manuscript, Cod. Alc. CCXC/143, contains Benedict of Petersborough's Miracula Sancti Thomae Cantuarensis, the Passio S. Thomae and one of Becket's letters. It was copied in 1185 at the monastery of Santa Mametis de Lorvão in Porto. Unfortunately, there is no way to tell when either of these manuscripts was acquired by Alcobaça.

With other manuscripts acquired from outside, the provenance is clearly indicated by notes or colophons. Cod. Alc. XCIII/2 was brought from Paris by Petrus de Monte-maiore in the thirteenth century. A monk named Petrus de Hyspania, a student at the College of Saint Bernard in Paris, bought Cod. Alc. CCXXV/261, a copy of Thomas Aquinas' commentary on the Sentences in Paris for twelve livres tournois in 1285. An Alcobaça monk, whose name has been erased from the ownership note, bought Cod. Alc. CCCIX/273, a copy of Johannes Andreae's commentary on the Liber Sextum, at the University of Lisbon for twelve libras. Acquisitions continued into the eighteenth century with Prior Bernardo do Amaral purchasing Cod. Alc. CCCLXV/393, a history of Brazil by Luiz de Silqueira da Gama in 1761, and Prior João Rangel purchasing two manuscripts described below in 1769.

To a very great extent, the manuscripts also furnish much, if not all, of our information about the Alcobaça library until the 1600s. Their collective narrative parallels what we know about the main course of Alcobaça history: slow growth in the twelfth century; great expansion in the thirteenth through fifteenth centuries; and, for the manuscripts, a second period of slow growth from 1500 to 1833. In tabular form, the distribution of manuscripts looks like this:

The majority of the collection, 344 manuscripts, dates before 1500, and 182 of these were copied between 1150 and 1300. For the remainder, the relatively large number of seventeenth-century manuscripts comes from the historical commonplace books or notebooks collected by the Brandãos, their assistants and successors in support of their historical work. There are seventeen such manuscripts among the descriptions of this volume alone. Many of the fourteenth- and fifteenth-century manuscripts came from the program of translations into Portuguese mentioned above.

By far the largest group of manuscripts are those from the thirteenth century with from 139 to 148 items -- the latter figure includes manuscripts dated to the turns of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. In these manuscripts, and in the thirty-eight from the twelfth century, can be found the important theological works that comprise the heart of the collection. Patristic and medieval texts, commentaries and liturgical books are the strengths of this group. Works on grammar, history and canon law are also found in it, but become greater in number among manuscripts of the fourteenth century and after. For the manuscripts as a whole, there are only a few scientific works, mostly Aristotle and commentaries. As noted above, there are no medical treatises, works on the pharmacopoeia or works on any sort of technological subjects at all. This omission is somewhat surprising given the many involvements of Alcobaça in these areas.

History, particularly of Alcobaça, the Cistercian Order and of Portugal, is well represented, especially among the later manuscripts. Patristic and medieval historians include: Eusebius, Cod. Alc. CCXII/375; Orosius, Cod. Alc. CCVII/415; Martinus Polonus, Cod. Alc. CCCLIII/16; and Peter Comestor's Historia Scholastica, Cod. Alc. CCCXLVII/339 and CCCXLVIII/340. Some of the histories of Alcobaça have already been discussed. For the historical works of de Brito and the Brandãos, the manuscript holdings make it possible to examine the use of sources in their notebooks, early draft versions of their works and, in some cases, the actual manuscript draft used to make the printed text. A small number of the later manuscripts also contain works on the overseas possessions of the Portuguese Empire, although more of them concern Brazil than the African or Indian possessions.

Into some of the later manuscripts have been bound printed works, the first signs of the revolution that would eclipse the manuscript library of Alcobaça as it did other such libraries throughout Europe. A case in point from the present volume is Cod. Alc. CCLXV/71, a codex which contains the 1486 Venice edition of Thomas à Kempis' De Imitatione Christi and the Speculum de honestate vite of Pseudo-Bernard, as well as manuscript versions of Walter Burley's De Vita et Moribus Philosophorum and two other works. Short printed works and printed pages used as pastedowns can be found throughout the collection. Although Alcobaça acquired a printing press sometime in the sixteenth century, none of the printed materials can be identified as having come from its press.

The advent of printing meant a new orientation for the abbey's library. After 1500, the word bibliotheca came increasingly to mean Alcobaça's growing collection of printed works. A reference from 1577 suggests that manuscripts were kept in the Cartorio, and Prior João Rangel spoke in 1769 of a "livraria manuscripta."⁸⁰ The frontispiece of this volume depicts the "livraria" of printed books, or Bibliotheca secundariae, as it looked in 1679. It flourished in the 1600s as a result of physical renovations and purchases made by Abbot-General Manoel de Moraes in 1656, and grew to over 4,000 volumes by 1801. Two catalogues and two analytical subject indices for this collection made by the monks of Alcobaça survive among the manuscripts of the Fundo Geral of the Biblioteca Nacional.⁸¹ The printed books fared much worse than did the manuscripts at the hands of the French and during the sack of the abbey in 1833. The remnants of this collection are also to be found in the Biblioteca Nacional.

One of the late seventeenth- or eighteenth- century librarians of Alcobaça added title pages to most of the manuscripts. It was during this process that the system of shelfmark numbers was either created or fixed. This first shelfmark system grouped the manuscripts by subject matter, beginning with Bibles and individual scriptural books and continuing in accepted medieval manner with the different sorts of theological works, grammar and so on. This system of classification, the shelfmark numbers or both may well have a medieval origin. There were no medieval catalogues, donation lists or inventories, or none have survived.

The first "modern" catalogue of the manuscripts appeared in 1775, the Index Codicum Bibliothecae Alcobatiae.... Written by anonymous authors who seem to have been laymen not connected to the monastery, it contains short descriptions of the manuscripts based largely on the eighteenth-century title pages. Guesses made concerning dates of manuscripts and styles of script are not representative of the state of eighteenth-century scholarship, to say the least. Guesses were also made concerning authorship of individual works which led the authors of the Index to attribute well-known medieval works to Alcobaça monks. These guesses may reflect written or oral tradition concerning the scribes of particular manuscripts, but, given the overall unreliability of this work, no assumptions are safe. Fortunato de São Boaventura excoriated the Index in his História cronologica e critica da Real Abadia de Alcobaça of 1827. In the following year, he wrote the lengthy and often valuable Commentariorum de Alcobacensi manuscriptorum Bibliotheca libri tres (3 vols. in 1; Coimbra, 1828) which corrected the many faults of the Index in the area of attributions.

The Commentariorum had little effect outside of Portugal. This was unfortunate, since the Index acquired new life through its use by G. Hänel. For his Catalogi Librorum Manuscripti (Leipzig, 1830--Reprint, Hildesheim, 1976), Hänel took the Index entries and turned them into short title entries with Arabic numerals for shelfmarks in place of the Roman numerals used by the Index. Hänel's list of the manuscripts was reprinted by J.-P. Migne in his Dictionnaire des Manuscrits, Nouvelle Encyclopedie Théologique, 41-42 (2 vols.; Paris, 1853). Ultimately, the Hänel listing has proven to be, over time, the most accessible bibliographic guide to the Alcobaça collection. M. L. W. Laistner and Henry King used it to identify Alcobaça manuscripts of the works of Bede in their A Handlist of Bede Manuscripts (Ithaca, N. Y., 1943), and it has been used as recently as 1973 by James Halporn in his edition of Cassiodorus' De Anima for the Corpus Christianorum, to name just a few.

History of Library and Scriptorium

The years following the acquisition of the Alcobaça manuscripts by the Biblioteca Nacional saw the formation of the Secção dos Manuscritos. Work done with the Fundo Alcobaça resulted in the building of card files of information concerning the manuscripts. This work in turn led to the production of António Joaquim Anselmo's Os Códices Alcobacenses da Biblioteca Nacional, I: Códices Portugueses (Lisbon, 1926), and the Inventário dos Códices Alcobacenses (5 fascicles; Lisbon, 1930-32) by A. F. de Ataíde e Melo. The Inventário effectively replaced Anselmo's 1926 catalogue by using his descriptions to provide a guide to the entire collection.

Despite the fact that it constituted a major advance over the Index, the Inventário is not an adequate guide to the Alcobaça manuscripts. Its faults have been noted by a number of scholars over the years since its appearance.⁸² The central problem is the Inventário's failure to provide incipits and explicits of the texts in the manuscripts. Its descriptions provide instead only tituli or rubrics with unexpanded abbreviations, and individual works were not linked with existing critical editions. The accuracy of many author attributions, which rely on the scribal tituli as corrected by the Commentariorum, and of some other elements of the descriptions is often questionable.

The problems of the Inventário were recognized by the Biblioteca Nacional when, during the eighth centenary of Alcobaça's foundation, a committee of scholars decided to take steps to improve it. Ultimately, the decision was made to provide a series of indices for the Inventário. This decision, however, meant using de Ataíde e Melo's descriptions as a base of information rather than returning to the manuscripts. The resulting volume became fascicle 6 of the Inventário, Indices (Lisbon, 1978) by Aires Augusto Nascimento. While the volume of indices provides an excellent guide to the Inventário, its accuracy stands in direct proportion to that of the original work. A catalogue of dated manuscripts of the Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon has been announced, but has not yet appeared.⁸³

The current volume and its two successors are intended to fill the need for an accurate guide to the manuscripts of the Fundo Alcobaça based on recent scholarship. Although descriptions are based on microfilms rather than the original manuscripts, these volumes will provide a full accounting of the works in the manuscripts and as much useful codicological information as it is possible to provide from microfilm. In this manner, the Hill Library hopes to produce a guide to the Alcobaça manuscripts worthy of the history and importance of the collection.

Format of This Catalogue

As noted in the Preface, the cataloguing of the Alcobaça manuscripts has been done with the aid of a microcomputer system. There is by now nothing particularly new in the use of a computer as an aid to manuscript studies.⁸⁴ This aspect of the project does mark the beginning of a new means of bibliographic control of the Hill Library's microfilmed manuscripts. It is also the first phase of the establishment of a data base of codicological descriptions, content descriptions and incipits which will be expanded through future cataloguing projects and the retrospective addition of data from existing Hill Library catalogues. In time, this data base will become an important resource for scholarship. At present, its major influence on the current volumes has been the imposition of a "telegraphic" style in the descriptions set out below in order to fit cataloguing data into the data base fields.

The philosophy behind these volumes has been to supply the maximum amount of useful information about the manuscripts and their contents in a format which is as economical of time and space as possible. Where departures have been made from this principle, we have tried to err on the side of the potential user. While the actual format employed in these volumes should not be entirely foreign to the user of manuscript catalogues, we strongly encourage at least a browsing glance at the following explanation of format.

Descriptions of each microfilmed manuscript consist of three major elements. The heading is composed of bibliographic information for both the Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon and the Hill Library, and a title for the manuscript to be described. Author names and titles follow accepted "standards," where these exist, for Portuguese authors and titles, medieval authors and titles and for liturgical books. Where titles have been composed they have been made as descriptive as possible. This practice has been followed for author names and titles in the contents entries as well.

The codicological paragraph, the second element, begins with place of origin and date on a separate line. The individual categories of information of the paragraph itself are separated by diamonds (◊) to facilitate reading of them. In the paragraph, the categories of information are material; size of folia (in millimeters); foliation (endleaves in small Romans); numeration; written space (in millimeters); number of lines; use of long lines or number of columns; framing and ruling system; headlines; quire signatures (includes quire signatures and catchwords); collation; script; hands; illuminations, decorations and initials; marginalia; colophon and name of scribe (if present); ownership marks; general comments about the manuscript; references in preceding catalogues and secundo folio reference. Where use of microfilm has made it impossible to determine codicological information, such as collation, that fact is noted. Explanations of some features peculiar to these volumes follow.

Unlike other cataloguers who have been able to correct previous systems of numeration with pencil in the codices and pen in their catalogues, we who work with microfilms must accept what we find. For these volumes, whenever existing numerations are incorrect that fact is noted in the codicological paragraph and a corrected system of numeration is used to locate works and individual features of interest. In the numeration description itself, existing numeration is corrected in the following manner: "Numbered 1(FELii)-245(243) by 20c hand." In this example the existing numeration begins on the second endleaf and continues to f. 243 of the actual count -- the first numbers are existing numeration and the second the actual numeration. In describing the location of works and other features in the manuscript, the procedure is reversed. A work which begins on f. 134(137)b will be found on f. 137 recto (only versos of folia, v, are noted) of the existing numeration in the second column, but the actual folium on which the work begins is f. 134. For the contents entries, then, the actual numeration precedes the existing numeration which will be inside parentheses. Unfortunately, "Corrected system" will be used frequently in the Alcobaça manuscripts.

Script nomenclature follows the system established by Bischoff and Lieftinck with modifications suggested by T. Julian Brown.²⁵ The use of Protogothica to describe the transitional French bookhand of the eleventh and twelfth centuries has already been discussed. For Gothic scripts, the now-standard designations Littera Gothica Quadrata (squared, footed forms), Semiquadrata (more formal shapes with diamond lozenges), Rotunda (rounded, less precise bows and minims), and Praecissa (no "feet") retain their meanings here. We substitute Hybrida for Bastarda, thus the designations include Littera Gothica Hybrida and Hybrida Cursiva. The stylistic designations Currens, Media and Formata are used to describe the intent of the scribe and designate usages in which the ductus reveals fewer liftings of the pen, an average bookhand and a calligraphic script respectively. Humanistica and Humanistica Italica retain their traditional meanings as well. Modern (post 1600) scripts, with their post-Humanistica letter forms and connecting ligatures, are simply designated "Modern Script."

Ownership marks include such things as formal ex libris statements, ownership notes, Biblioteca Nacional Fundo numbers and Alcobaça title pages. Elements which are common throughout the collection are library stamps and Biblioteca Nacional, Lisbon ex libris bookplates. There are two forms of library stamps. One is an upright oval containing the Alcobaça coat-of-arms surrounded by the legend "Livraria D'Alcobaça." The second is the round Biblioteca Nacional stamp. These are distinguished as "library stamp" for

Alcobaça and "library stamp (BN de Lisboa)." The bookplate is a printed rectangle affixed to the front pastedown containing a figure illuminated by a shaft of light and the legend "Ano X de Revolução Nacional 1926-1936." It is designated Ex Libris, and will be distinguished from proper medieval ex libris forms as the latter occur.

The content entries are the final element of the descriptions. These entries begin at the left of the page with the beginning and ending numeration of each work, with correction where applicable following the system explained above. An Arabic number in parentheses designates the order of works in each manuscript. The content entry proper contains: author and title of work; the titulus or rubric (Tit); incipit (Inc); explicit (Expl); Colophon (Coloph); edition(s) (Ed); other manuscripts (Omss) and comments (Com).

Incipits are given for all works in the manuscripts including significant works in the endleaves. Where a work contains one or more prologues or prefaces, the incipit of the prologue is headed [Prol] -- or [Prol1], [Prol2]... for multiple prologues -- and the main text incipit by [Text]. Salutations of letters are generally not given for edited letter collections. Where they exist, their presence is noted by [Sal]. For collections of letters or sermons, the incipit is taken from the first work in the collection and the explicit from the last work. Incipits of all other works in such collections can be found in the Index of Incipits at the back of the volume. Incipit mutilatus and Explicit mutilatus are abbreviated [Inc. mut.] and [Expl. mut.] respectively.

The words of these incipits, explicits and other citations from the manuscripts reflect faithfully what was found in them. Medieval Latin usage varied greatly over the centuries, particularly in respect to such things as diphthongs and cases used in certain grammatical constructions. There would be little point in correcting, or even noting with a (!) for sic, such things as a common use of "predicare" for "praedicare." While this respect for the text of the manuscript may produce difficulties in indexing incipits, the horrors produced by Pope Urban VIII in his reform of the breviary hymns to a "correct" Latinity should serve as a cautionary tale for liturgists and manuscript cataloguers alike.

Editions (Ed) contains references to the presence of works in standard collections, such as Migne's Patrologia, and a selective reference to modern critical editions. Other Manuscripts (Omss) contains cross-references to other copies of a work in the Alcobaça manuscripts and to lists of manuscripts in editions or reference works. In the interests of time and space, this listing has been made necessarily selective. Comments (Com) listings include remarks about the nature of or peculiarities in this particular version of a given work. The listing also contains the citations of works in standard reference guides, such as the Clavis Patrum Latinorum or Bibliotheca Hagiographica Latinorum, where these have not already been mentioned.

Format of This Catalogue

Given the constant advances of knowledge made in all the fields of study where manuscripts are primary sources, no manuscript catalogue can claim to be definitive. This is particularly true, on codicological grounds, for a catalogue prepared from microfilms. These volumes, however, need no further justification than the fact that they will provide access to the works in the Alcobaça manuscripts to a degree hitherto unobtainable. If these volumes result in increased use of the Alcobaça manuscripts, in the original and on microfilm, by the international community of scholars, then they will have accomplished the purpose behind their production.

Acknowledgements

Any project such as this is almost a collaborative venture by the time it is completed. It becomes more of a pleasure than an obligation to thank the institutions and people who helped to make this volume possible. I join our Executive Director, Dr. Julian G. Plante, in acknowledging the support of the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation for the cataloguing work and the generosity of Mr. Louis F. Hill of St. Paul, Minnesota in supplying the microcomputer system used to produce the volume. For assistance with the work itself, I should like to thank my predecessor, Dr. Richard Gerberding, now of the University of Alabama-Huntsville for his conceptualization of the project and his drive to involve computers in the Hill Library's cataloguing work. Ms. Arlene Gardinier of the Interlibrary Loan service of Saint John's University's Alcuin Library made it possible to obtain a variety of secondary works and editions which I could not have otherwise used.

Above all, the staff of the Hill Library supplied constant help and encouragement. Among my colleagues Fr. Gregory Sebastian, O.S.B. has been a particularly valuable source of information for liturgical manuscripts and a source of considered wisdom on almost every aspect of the work of this volume. Fr. Peregrin Berres, O.S.B. became the Library's data-entry specialist, inputting the information into the computer and providing freely of his experience to help with the design and production of the finished volume. Fr. Knute Anderson, O.S.B. read an early version of these descriptions and added bibliographical depth to a number of them. The writing of this Introduction and the making of the Indices benefitted from discussions with Dr. Jonathan Black, co-author of the third volume of this series. No work could get done at the Hill Library without the day-to-day labors of Mrs. Marianne Hansen, Administrative Assistant. Dr. Julian G. Plante made the work done on this volume possible, and has created a major scholarly resource out of a vision of preserving the heritage of the past.

Finally, I should like to thank my wife, Barbara, for her understanding and encouragement during the long days and nights of work on the the cataloguing, the computer system and the current volume. She helped to make the difficulties tolerable and the delights of discoveries even more enjoyable.

Much of the credit for whatever is good in this volume needs to be shared. The responsibility for errors of fact or judgement are mine alone. A good part of the credit should go to the many members of the Alcobaça community who created this collection of manuscripts over the centuries. I feel that I have come to know many of them well and hope that this volume would meet with their approval.

Notes

1. For the history of this project, see William F. Lanahan, Hill Monastic Manuscript Library: Progress Report IX (Collegeville, MN, 1980), 3-4.
2. The two catalogues are the anonymous Index Codicum Bibliothecae Alcobatiae (Lisbon, 1775) and F. A. de Ataíde e Melo, Inventário dos Códices Alcobacenses (5 fascicles; Lisbon, 1930-1932). The catalogues and their problems for researchers are discussed below.

4. For the history of Alcobaça there is no single reliable modern source for reasons that will shortly become clear. There is an extensive literature in Portuguese beginning with the works of Bernardo de Brito and António Brandão, cited below. A short bibliography on the history of Alcobaça would include the following works: Manoel dos Santos OCist, Alcobaça Illustrada.... Part 1 (Coimbra, 1710); Fortunato de São Boaventura OCist, Historia cronológica e crítica da Real Abadia de Alcobaça.... (Lisbon, 1827) -- both were monks of Alcobaça; Manuel Vieira Natividade, O Mosteiro de Alcobaça (Coimbra, 1885); idem, D. Estevam Martins e as escolas públicas do Mosteiro de Alcobaça (Lisbon, 1915); Canon Robert Trilhe, s.v. "Alcobaça," Dictionnaire d'Histoire et de Géographie ecclésiastique (Paris, 1914-), II: 25-29; Arturo Gusmão, work cited in note 3 and A Expansão da Arquitectura Borgonhesa e os Mosteiros de Cister em Portugal (Lisbon, 1956); Maur Cocheril, "L'Ordre de Cîteaux au Portugal. Le Problème Historique." Studia Monastica 1(1959): 51-95; and idem, Études sur le Monachisme en Espagne et au Portugal (Paris and Lisbon, 1966). 6. Autograph manuscript versions of these works are to be found in Cod. Alc. CCCLIV/288, CCCLV/289. CCCLVII/224 and CCCLVI/227 respectively which will be described in volume II. On the Cistercian historiographers of Alcobaça, see Alfredo Pimenta, Os Historiógrafos de Alcobaça (Lisbon, 1943). On de Brito as historian, see Gusmão, Expansão, 56-62; and Cocheril, Études, 258-261.

7. This correspondence, Bernard's letters 308, 463 and 470 of the Maurist edition, centers around the famous letter numbered 308 -- PL 182: 512B-513A -- the authenticity of which was accepted by Mabillon and which was only decisively exploded as a forgery by Cocheril. See his Études, 269-312, which repeats his earlier "Saint Bernard et le Portugal. A propos d'une lettre apocryphe," Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique 54(1959): 426-477. Jean LeClercq, S. 11. The memorial is found in Cod. Alc. CXLVII/82, RELi-ii. The Inventario attributes it to Cristovão de Evora OCist, scribe of the Ordinarium which precedes it. The work itself, however, is in an entirely different hand. See also Gusmão, Expansão, 54 and 150 for further misidentifications of authorship.

14. Ranulphus is described as Alcobaça's first abbot in the Alcobaça Martyrology, Cod. Alc. CCC/231, f. 26v; and the Memorial, CXLVII/82, f. 140v. A summary of his career is given by Manrique, Annales, II: Appendix, 3; and São Boaventura, Historia, 171-172.

44. The manuscripts are Cod. Alc. XXX/89, discussed below, and XXX/221 to be described in volume II.
45. From this volume, Cod. Alc. CCCXXVII/74 (Hugh), CXLVI/62 and CXLVIII/63 (Ordinaria) and CCCXXVI/73 (Cistercian Customary). Most of the important translated works, and almost all of the early ones, will be described in volume II of this series.
46. This argument depends largely on the dating of the manuscripts established in these volumes. As mentioned above, most of the early translations will be found in the second volume, but the Melchior dos Reis translation of Calvaca cited in note 44 above clearly illustrates the point. It dates well before 1400.

48. In Canivez's edition of the Statuta, Alcobaça and its affairs appear on a fairly regular basis from 1206 to 1294, usually as a party in one dispute or another. In 1320 the abbot of Alcobaça became visitator of the Order of Christ, anno 1320: 2, Statuta, III: 347-348. After 1320, Alcobaça appears only four more times in the General Chapter's statutes.
