PRESENTATION

It is a pleasure for me to introduce this inventory of the 'Spoils' of the Knights of St. John, located at the Cathedral Museum, Mdina, Malta. The catalog of this collection is certainly an important contribution to the Order's history. Research on this collection is now possible. The archives at the Cathedral Museum, Mdina, have only recently been reorganized. The Microfilm Project operating at the Cathedral Museum in conjunction with Saint John's University Collegeville, Minnesota, has accelerated the process of reorganization — for manuscripts have to be paginated, inventoried and classified before they are put on film. This same project has also stimulated historical research and rendered the study of many worn out and fragile documents — like the volumes of this series — easier and more handleable. A copy of the collection of the 'Spoils' and indeed of the whole Mdina collection is available for research at the Malta Study Center of the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library at Saint John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota.

The whole series of 72 volumes, covering the years 1549 to 1772, comprise the 'spoils' of more than a thousand members of the Order of Malta. The compiler, Chev. Joseph Galea, has included additional biographical annotations on each knight, gleaned from his knowledge and experience of the Archives of the Order.

Prior to this volume, the Malta Study Center published two other works, by Canon John Azzopardi who directs the project in Malta, namely a HANDLIST OF THE EPISCOPAL AND PRO-VICARIAL ARCHIVES AT THE CATHEDRAL MUSEUM, MDINA-MALTA (1977) and, in collaboration with Dr. Anthony Luttrell, ARCHIVES OF THE CATHEDRAL OF MALTA, MISC. 32 A: 1313-1529, THE STUDY AND TEXT OF AN EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY INDEX OF TRANSCRIPTS (Malta 1977).

It is earnestly hoped that more catalogs and studies on the Malta collection will eventually be published, evincing the wealth of material contained therein, dating from the 14th to the 19th centuries.

Introduction

Soon after the French government of Malta had capitulated to the British garrison in 1800, the records of the Order of Saint John, together with those of the Università and the archives of the Holy Inquisition, had been subjected to a series of shiftings and divisions between the local Council of administration and the ecclesiastical authorities. It was held, and justly accepted, that the very foundation of authority under the rule of the Knights of St. John between 1530 and 1798, has always been the Canon Law. After various discussions it was decided that the records of the Order and those of the Università should be passed to the Government. The records of the Inquisition, however, were removed from the chancery in Birgu by an ecclesiastic for 'reason of safety'. Later on he transferred them to the Curia of the diocese in Valletta. Some other volumes formerly belonging to the Order of St. John somehow also found their way to these archives.

These records, including those of the Maltese Inquisition are now conserved in the Cathedral Museum and Archives in Mdina, the old capital of the island. Among these are the sixty three manuscript volumes of the Spogli, which were never part and parcel of the Church's records and whose study would fill many a gap in the glorious history of the Order, while completing the biographical information on each member of the Order.

The volumes of the Spogli under examination, are a splendid example of a filing-system adopted by the chancery of the Order, of loose documents, which accumulated naturally during the course of administration. The attested documents of the claimants have been collected together in separate volumes in quires. A file or dossier was thus made for each knight, or member of the Order, and bound in volumes.

The Spoils, commonly known as Spogli, consisted in the produce of all the personal effects of a knight at his death, if he was untested, and no trace of his will, or testament, has been found.

In modern military parlance, Spoils were the "board of adjustment". All the members of the Order, knights, serving brothers, and chaplains, according to the Statutes were bound to draw up a will, or testament of their assets and liabilities, in the presence of two other knights as witnesses, during a dangerous malady, or before embarking on a cruise, or if allowed to visit their relatives abroad.

This series of the Spoils is divided in two sections; the verdict given by the Commission concerning the Spoils, and the proceedings of the Commission, commonly known as Processi degli Spogli. But, on examining both sections, it emerges that the first and second series are almost identical, and it is suggested that both should be considered as one classification.

The Spoils left by the deceased knights were administered by the Grand Commander of the Order, the Pilier of the Langue of Provence, who was also the president of the Treasury, commonly known as the Comun Tesoro, and in charge of all the responsions.

On the demise of a knight, or of any member duly admitted into the Order, including Serving Brothers and Chaplains, the Council would set up a commission to examine and enquire into all claims submitted by the creditors of the deceased. The Commission could thus provide for the disposal of all personal property.

The Commission had a threefold power – administrative, supervisory, and judicial, limited however, by circumstances. Throughout the years, successive modification were made, according to the amendments and exigencies of the Statutes promulgated by the Supreme Council of the Order.

If the deceased had any slaves as his property, they could not be disposed of by the Commission, but were transferred to the Treasury, unless the deceased knight, had given them their freedom during his lifetime.

All the property pertaining privately to the deceased knight, would be auctioned, and the outcome of the sale would provide for the payment and final settlement of any debt. If a claimant submitted a written receipt for any money given on loan, or for jewellery, clothes, paintings, etc., - provided these were still available when the Commission started its proceedings - it enabled the claimant to request their return, or if in the negative, to ask for an adequate compensation.

During our researches and study of these volumes for the compilation of this Catalogue, we have gleaned important information particularly about the interests of each individual knight; indeed, many of them, judging from what emerges in the bills submitted for wine and luxury food, we are apt to conclude that they were also bon viveurs and from the contents of their collections they were also connoisseurs of excellent objects d'art.

The claimants having submitted to the Commission documentary evidence of their credit, had to present themselves personally, or by means of a procurator provided with written power of attorney, at the Commission's office in Valletta. They had also to make a declaration, or a sworn affidavit regarding their claim.

The Commission then scrutinised carefully the validity of the claim against the untested knight, and after the usual procedure, as laid down in the stipulated regulations, action would be taken to enforce the final settlements of the proper accounts.

The evolution of the legislation of the Order has not been studied exhaustively. The decrees enacted by the Chapters General held between 1330 and 1776, the last ever held, besides the deliberations, the privileges, and the ordinances decided upon by the Grand Master and Council, included also a section regarding the Spoils in the chapter of the Treasury.

Giovanni Maria Caravita, the Prior of Lombardy, has written a Compendio alfabetico de' Statuti della Sacra

Religione Gerosolimitana, per facilità alla recognizione de' medesimi, which was printed posthumously in Borgo Novo, by the publisher Antonio Scionico, in 1718 (in fol. pp. 120) gives a detailed account about the regulation governing the Spoils.

In the Archives of the Order (A.O.M.) there are two volumes, inter alia, that furnish all details about the procedure of the Commission examining the spoils of the deceased knights.

A.O.M. codex 1679 and 1680 – Trattato del Tesoro, written by G.M. Caravita, in two volumes.

Codex 1679 (Vol. 1) Degli Spogli, dei diritti spettanti al Tesoro e di alcuni dubbi circa la successione di alcuni beni dei membri dell'Ordine, pp. 119-149

Del pagamento dei debiti dei fratelli defunti, pp. 150-220

Dei beni degli spogli che s'impiegano in vari usi dell'Ordine e che non vanno direttamente in beneficio del Tesoro, pp. 221-229

Dei beni degli spogli che passano ad altri, in virtù di vari dispense, pp. 249-255

Della facoltà che si concede ai membri dell'Ordine di disporre della quinta parte dei beni mobili, e del metodo di fare la liquidazione del quinto, pp. 255-261

Codex 1680 (Vol. 2) by the same author,

Dei Commissari degli spogli, delle loro autorità, e delle loro funzioni, pp. 655-672.

Occasionally sporadic abuses have given place to the enactment of laws, awarding fines and imprisonment, rarely privation of the habit. The Prior of Capua was condemned to life imprisonment for the embezzlement of some 15,000 ducats, whilst he held the office of Receiver of the revenues of the Order in Naples and Rome, in addition to 1,300 ducats from the Spogli of deceased knights.

Commander Voguener, who was employed with the administration of the Treasury, had pretended to transfer the spoglios of dead knights to his house, for eventual distribution amongst the claimants. Abusively he claimed that it was his responsibility to distribute the slaves, forming part of the spoils, to whomsoever he thought.

Oftentimes litigation protracted too much when some of the slaves were baptized, which gave rise to pretensions by the local Bishop, claiming that they were his property.

Another problem was the spoglio of a deceased Bishop of Malta, who according to the Statutes was the second dignity after the Grand Master. The appointment of the Bishop pertained to the Grand Master and Council: when a vacancy occurred the grand master would submit three names to the Vatican, usually from amongst the chaplains of the Order, or court favourites. The choice pertained to Rome, but certainly the appointed bishop had to be a persona grata.

The Order waived all pretensions, acting on the Statutes, and held firmly that the investiture of the island by Charles V to the Order in 1530, has not specified that the Bishop is exempted from the customary bye-laws.

On one occasion the knight Aglie had bequeathed his belongings in favour of his brothers. This attitude gave rise to litigations and court procedures, because the Statutes lay that on some occasions a knight after petitioning the Council could bequeath one fifth of his belongings to the members of his family. The Council, however, could not accept such pretensions, unless these were adequate to the prescribed regulations. The pretender appealed to Rome, and the thrifty Barberini, the Cardinal Secretary of State in Rome, challenged the decision of the Treasury's claim. It is also known that Pope Urban VIII had favoured and deliberately excused many favourite knights from willing the spoils to the Order.

In the Archives of the Order conserved in the National Library, in Valletta, there are a few manuscript volumes relating to the Spoils, but in comparison to those under examination they are rather very late.

The Manuscripts

The chief difficulty of reading many of the volumes under examination lies in the immense variety of forms the names of the knight concerned was capable of passing through, owing to the laxity of spelling and pronunciation. Many of the names and surnames were known by oral tradition, and necessarily the clerk wrote down the names as they sounded to his ears. Particularly the French name's sounds have a different effect on different persons, thus the most common name often appeared in very strange and unrecognizable disguises.

Though Latin was slowly falling into disuse, apart from the Chancery, the Italian language was almost dominant throughout the whole series of volumes under examination.

The Commission was constituted of two or three dignitaries of the Order, who employed also clerks from their ranks, usually either chaplains, often enrolled from the Maltese clergy, or others.

Admittedly, many of the knights were not a race of scholarly clerks, and therefore had to depend upon those employed by the Order, oftentimes devolving upon the clergymen. Many of the knights were illiterate men, whose only accomplishments consisted of being rich and noble, good soldiers with zeal and devotion for humanitarian service, and able enough, perhaps, to read and write. The majority of the French knights had a hyphened surname, otherwise they were also known by a nickname, oftentimes originating from the territorial possessions of their families.

From my pesonal notes, gleaned from various sources in the manuscript material of the National Library throughout my career as archivist, where possible, I have included the dates of the admission of the knight in the Order, and also a brief curriculum vitae, together with the date of his death and burial place. Prior to 1694 there is no official record of the burials in St. John, or elsewhere. Neither the claimant's papers nor the clerk's records took the trouble to write the date of the knight's death, though this necessarily was required for investigations by the Commission. However, I have left blank where no locality could be traced, which might also have been abroad.

No attention to the old pagination of the text of the volumes has been given. Blank folios, in the past, have not been numbered, but when the volumes were being microfilmed recently, a modern pagination has been included. In this Catalogue blank folios are not considered, and the numbered folios are the text.

I am deeply grateful to the Very Rev. Canon John Azzopardi, the Curator of the Cathedral Museum and Archives, for allowing me to peruse the volumes, and compile this Catalogue, and especially for his words of encouragement, and help throughout.
